PHOTOGRAPHY OF THE INVISIBLE.

The grand moral idea which science continually seeks to impress upon her votaries is humility of mind; that inestimable virtue whence spring the noblest pleasures of the soul. But how rare it is to find of this beautiful quality, even in the great of culture and learning! The great doctors looked upon Galileo with contempt, confined him in prison as a dangerous man, and subjected him to the most ignominious treatment, simply because he presented to their eyes a light from a new idea, which their dull perceptions were unable to appreciate. He affirmed that the sun did not really rise or set; that it was the rotation of the earth that brought day and night alternately upon the earth. But the doctors, like many of our day, proud in their own conceit of knowledge, knew better. "The scriptures tell us," they said, "of the rising and the setting sun; therefore it moves; our own eyes assure us of the fact; the diurnal experience of mankind confirms the truth. Your doctrine, Galileo, is false and dangerous. It is in this style that some persons, very knowing in their own esteem, reason upon certain subjects. Take spirit photography for an example. They allege that spirits are invisible; that an invisible thing cannot be photographed; therefore the so-called spirit photographs are base impostures.

It is not our purpose to dissent from the conclusion here assumed; but we take exception to the premises, which are not in agreement with the science. Photographs of some objects that are invisible to the human eye, may undoubtedly be produced. The spectrum of solar light is an example, portions of which, totally invisible to the eye, are brought out upon the photographer's plate; and their presence is also demonstrated by other instruments.

The mental effect which we term "light" is supposed to be produced by the beating of waves of ether against the retina of the eye. These waves enter the eye with an average velocity of about 186,000 miles in a second, the length of the waves being variable, from the one twenty-seven thousandth part of an inch, to one seventy-five thousandth part of an inch. The retina therefore receives many billions of impressions in a second, and it is supposed that it is the difference in the number and velocity of these impressions that produces in the mind the sensation of the colors. If the waves which enter the eye have a much greater or a much less velocity than the limits above stated, they do not, it is supposed, produce the sensation of light; and the objects from which such rays come, although they may really stand before the eye, are, as we say, invisible. But although they do not affect the eye, they may impress the photographic plate, which has no such constitution as the eye.

One of the most successful methods of producing "spirit" photographs is to place, in front of the sensitive plate, within the plate shield, a clear sheet of glass having nothing upon it except a thin positive of the "spirit" that is to be produced on the negative. The portrait of the "spirit" is taken in the usual manner. The light which enters the camera lens prints the sitter and also the "spirit" which is on the thin positive upon the negative. This is a very convenient method, as it requires no manipulations likely to be detected; and, in we think, the favorite plan practiced by the best spirit photographers. Prints made in this manner pass current among the believers for genuine ghosts of the departed, directly descended from heaven.

But a more new, interesting, and scientific method of producing "spirit" photographs, is as follows: The plate is backed, ground screen, before which the sitter is placed in order to have his portrait taken, is to be painted beforehand with the form of the desired "spirit," the paint being composed of some fluorescent substance, such as a solution of sulphate of quinine. When this painting dries on the screen, it is invisible to the eye; but it sends out rays that have power to impress the photo plate; and thus the image of the person together with the quinine ghost are simultaneously developed upon the negative. This is a very beautiful and remarkable method.—[Scientific American.]

How BAZAIRE ONCE SAVED HIS JUDGE. "X," relates in the Norfolk Landmark that, among other interesting items to be found in Veron's reminiscences, souvenirs of his history by a very aged man, who was once under other regimes an attaché of the place: "It was in the Spring of 1832," said the old man, "and Louis Philippe had run down to Trianon, accompanied by several of his children. One of them, a lad of ten years of age, tired by the close of a day of traveling, as soon as he got well on the grounds, in spite of the admonitions of his tutor, started on a wild, harem scamper over the garden, and in his headlong gale tumbled very unroly into an artificial lake. 'I heard,' said he 'the boy's cries, and ran to the spot; but when I reached the lake I found he had been pulled out by a young sergeant de service who had been taking a turn in the garden. The young prince, shivering with cold and dripping like a drowned rat, begged the officer and myself not to let his father and his tutor know of his mishap, and requested me to conduct him privately to his apartments. That boy is to-day the Duc d'Angame, who presides as Judge over a military court convened at the same Trianon to try the case of Marshal Bazaine, who was then simply the Sergeant Bazine who saved the drowning prince."

In Vienna, recently, Professor Hyatt delivered a lecture on mercury, when he exhibited the leg bone of a man whose death had undoubtedly been hastened by that substance. On striking the bone heavily upon the table, out fell thousands of little glittering globules of mercury, which rolled about upon the black surface before him, collecting here and there into drops.

Vice-President Wilson's health is not so nearly restored as has been reported. His physicians forbid his doing more than an hour's work each day, and he has, therefore, occupied the chair as President of the Senate less than an hour a day since Congress convened.
